

Class of 2013

In recognition of the privilege and responsibility that has been conferred upon us, we, the medical students of the Class of Two Thousand Thirteen, devote ourselves to the following principles in the service of humanity.

We pledge:

- To transcend the highest standards of conduct, integrity, humility, and altruism;
- To approach each day with enthusiasm, recognizing that we are leaders and role models in the community;
- To acknowledge our limitations as individuals, while fostering teamwork and communication to rise above our own expectations;
- To maintain balance, remembering that our patient's well being is tied to our own;
- To preserve the dignity of others and strive to do no harm;
- To fully devote ourselves to the needs of our patients demonstrating compassionate, unbiased care;
- To value the diversity of patients' and colleagues' experiences, cultures, and beliefs;
- To dedicate ourselves to a life of learning and seek to enhance our abilities and advance the practice of medicine;

Today we submit to the guidance of mentors, colleagues, patients, communities and our own morals in upholding these values. Our lives will brightly show our character composed of compassion, honesty, and service. By committing to this oath, we honor the work and sacrifice of those professionals who came before us and strive to strengthen the foundation for those who follow.
