

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES FILM SERIES

FEATURING

MORE THAN A MONTH

Shukree Hassan Tilghman, a young African-American filmmaker, sets out on a cross-country campaign to end Black History Month. Through this thoughtful and humorous journey, he explores what the treatment of history tells us about race and equality in a “post-racial” America. Tilghman’s campaign to end Black History Month is actually a provocative gambit to open public conversation about the idea of ethnic heritage months, and whether relegating African American history to the shortest month of the year—and separating it from American history on the whole—denigrates the role of black people and black culture throughout American history. But it is also a seeker’s journey to reconcile his own conflicting feelings about his own identity, history, and convictions. More Than A Month is not just about a yearly tradition, or history, or being black in America. It is about what it means to be an American, to fight for one’s rightful place in the American landscape, however unconventional the means, even at the risk of ridicule or misunderstanding. It is a film about discovering oneself.
