M.S. I

Hard-working. Cut-throat. Creative. Socially derelict. Curious. Selfish.

At one time or another, all of these adjectives and more have been used to describe that most enigmatic class of 1990. Perhaps an accurate analogy is to think of the first year class as a 113 piece jigsaw puzzle ... with each piece belonging to an entirely different puzzle. Superhuman efforts obviously went into the assembling of this unique collection of future physicians. Cosmopolitan doesn't even begin to describe the backgrounds, geographical locales and mindsets that characterize them.

And yet, somehow, someway, someday, this seemingly chaotic and individualistic group will come together as colleagues, united in the task of providing a high standard of medical care to the community at large. Just exactly when this cohesion will occur is anyone's guess, but rumor has it that the approach of clinical work toward the end of the second year serves as an unimpeachable catalyst.

In the meantime, the class of 1990 shows every sign of marching to 113 different drummers. We will all slog through the same biochemical mires, trudge along that same long road through gross anatomy, avoid the same histological pitfalls, slip by that self-same quagmire of neuroanatomy, and flounder through the same slings and arrows of outrageous physiology and embryology. The destination is the same, and there is only one path ... but oh, so many different ways of approaching it.

It has been remarked that consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds. The class of 1990 is in no danger here! As it continues to grow and to learn, let us hope that its individuals continue to seek out each other for support, for celebration, for commiseration. Remember, we're all in this boat together .... so who's swiped the oar?

Right: David Craig ... We would have had a snappier caption, but would you mess with a man who can bench press the entire Anatomy Department?

Far Right: While most of us sweat about gross lab parts, Mahmood Moradi nonchalantly throws darts.

Top center: Mark Robertson ... "That's 2 BLT's, hold the mayo, one fry, 3 cokes, and a Twinkie."

M.S. II

8:00 AM, Typical Monday Morning

"First slide, please. This slide illustrates the clinical presentation of a patient with CHF. In contradistinction to your first impression that your job is to memorize this slide, your real mission as second year students is to realize that you won't become an internist in just one lecture. Only through working with patients and building your knowledge do you become aware of your duties to, and responsibilities for, your patients.

The first year of medical school is an adjustment period. The second year is more of a deluge of information—thousands of pages of information to be learned; information that is relevant and important, or absolutely, irrevocably irrelevant and pointless (in which case the National Board of Medical Examiners will surely deem the material testable). It is a time of continued growth and maturation (especially of the gluteus maximus as you feel it spreading from sitting in class all day).

Probably the most positive aspect of the second year is developing and expanding the friendships that were begun last year. Classmates become more than just friends; they become colleagues to be respected.

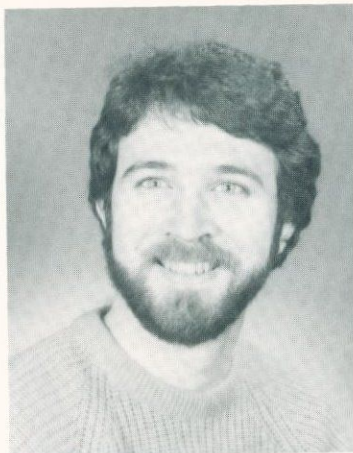

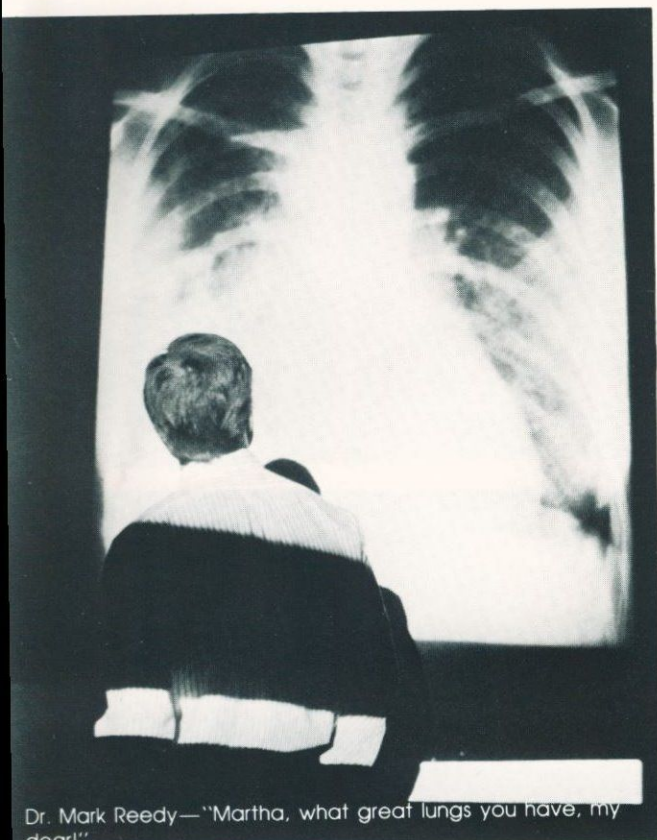

We look forward to our clinical years, but in doing so, we feel a sense of loss with the separation of our "family" to the three different campuses. This year has been demanding, frustrating and also quite enjoyable. Perhaps Sir William Osler said it best ... 'Hard though the conditions may be, approached in the right spirit—the spirit which has animated us from the days of Hippocrates—the practice of medicine affords scope for the exercise of the best faculties of the mind and heart.' Next slide please."

M.S. III

Right: Michelle Deshon ...making contact with the real world.

The life of an M.S. III, if one can call it that, is a rather simple process ...work until you drop! This is the year that the word rotation takes on an entirely different meaning. And as memories of the outside world slip farther and farther away, the days of Physiology and Pharmacology never seemed so good.

But after two years of passive learning, ...a veritable mountain full of information to be sure, but passive nonetheless, ...there is a certain joy to getting one's hands on the public at large. With this anticipation comes also an ever growing sense of inadequacy, a feeling that I know so little and everyone else knows so much. And of course, everyone knows who and what we are ...pockets bulging with reference materials that real doctors eschew, and coats, which, by their shortness, scream to all the world that we haven't quite arrived. Even the patients aren't fooled, despite the badges, tags and pens, and strategically placed stethoscope growing from around our necks. To have come so far, only to feel that once again, we have landed squarely at the bottom of the pack ...somehow, it just doesn't seem fair.

Whether we land at "the country club" in Amarillo, migrate South to El "where we get to deliver 40 babies during OB/Gyn rotation" Paso, or remain in "what extenuating circumstances did you have to get assigned to" Lubbock, we all work like there was no tomorrow. And on those days when it seems like the religious studies undergraduate from Nowheresville U.S.A. knows much more about the art of medicine than we, something inside keeps telling us that we are learning. In fact, if the old maxim that "one learns by one's mistakes" is true, then our cups of knowledge runneth over.

M. S. IV

The fourth year of medical school is an experience. With third year rotations behind you, you are handed a piece of paper on which to designate what electives you desire to study, in four-week sections, during your fourth year. When it has been thoroughly explained that one cannot take four months of vacation in addition to two months of "Radi-holiday," you end up with any variety of electives in various places around the globe. The senior year has two required rotation months, one as a Family Medicine clerkship and one as a Family Medicine Preceptorship.

A lot of fourth year students take the month of July as vacation. Possibly, this practice should be mandatory. During that month, some people actually take vacations, but an equal number catch up on sleep and reacquaint themselves with their families. This is also the month in which paperwork for residency application begins in earnest. Long about November, most students take another month off to interview for residencies. Deja vu! The whole experience is entirely too reminiscent of interviewing for medical school.

Then one fateful day in January, you make the decision that seals your fate, the list that you sent to the matching program. Now all that is left is to sit back and not foul up the remaining rotations . . . and wait for Match Day. Match Day comes once in a lifetime around the middle of March in your fourth year of med school. This is when you find out if the programs that you liked, liked you too. Usually celebrated with a party, you may now begin to formulate answers to the questions, "How am I going to get all my stuff that far?"

Then Graduation Day arrives, sooner than you would have believed. Now you are referred to as "Doctor," and the word doesn't have the quotation marks around it, and the profound responsibility begins to have real meaning. The Texas Tech School of Medicine Graduating Class of 1987 will go to 59 different graduate programs, to all corners of the country, in 19 different specialties. We trust that each and every one will excel in their chosen field, reflecting the good educational foundation built.
